Chief Executive Officer
Gryphn Corporation

Navroop Mitter is the CEO of Gryphn Corporation. Prior to founding Gryphn, Navroop worked at Accenture where he focused on building information security practices in emerging markets and led senior staff on international engagements. Navroop and his team helped expand the company's security practice in both the United States and abroad.

In this role, Navroop set the direction of the Scandinavian Security Practice, identifying high-value clients and crafting successful win strategies. He was also responsible for launching the Argentine Security Operations Center where he recruited, hired and engaged over 30 security practitioners in Argentina in less than 30 days. By the end of his tenure at Accenture, Navroop was leading the Security Solutions Architecture group on large-scale deals ($50M – $500M).

Earlier in his career, Navroop served as an advisor to various technology companies while working for three of the largest global consulting firms. He has also worked for start-ups in Southern California and Boston, Massachusetts. In 1998, Navroop was recognized in Time magazine as an up-and-coming technology scholar when he was 17 years old.

Currently, Navroop is an active member of DC Entrepreneurship Week, where he was invited to speak about current (mobile?) security issues and making the leap from working in a large corporation to starting his own start-up. In his spare time, Navroop is most likely hopping on a plane with an international destination in mind – or pursuing one of his many hobbies which include: riding cruisers, cooking, kayaking and attending Jazz in the Garden on hot Friday afternoons in Washington, DC. Navroop holds degrees in Bio-Medical Engineering and Religion from Boston University.
